(15 Jan 1701.2) Abigail Spendelowe of Newcastle under Lyme widdow and relict of Thomas Spendelowe of Newcastle apothecary [pharmacopalam] [renounces in favour of creditor] Edward Ford of Keel husbandman ...

(19 Jan 1701.2) Mr Thomas Spendelow, deceased, late Receiver for the County of Stafford; The names of his security are Ralph Sneyd of Keele Esquire, John Lawton of Cheshire Esq; Thomas Spendelow of Tilly (Salop) gentleman, William Rowley deceased late of Newcastle gentleman, Peter Spendelow of Norbury gentleman. This receiver's debt was £4,369; but there has lately been paid by him and Security, the sum of £1,700; so there remains of this debt, on the Third Three Shillings Aid the sum of £2,669. [JOURNALS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS]

[John Lawton This action signified Lawton's decision to lay aside political activity in view of a deepening crisis in his personal finances precipitated by the insolvency and then death of Thomas Spendelowe (mayor of Newcastle in 1698–9), the receiver-general of Staffordshire, for whom Lawton was one of the principal sureties. Cotton's position, on the other hand, had been bolstered by his association with Leveson Gower 'who principally supports Mr Cotton's interest at Newcastle'. Leveson Gower improved his position yet further at Lawton's expense by obtaining the vacant receiver-general's post for William Burslem, who may already have been his chief election agent in the borough. The strength of the Tory interest, plus Lawton's financial troubles, probably explains the unopposed return of Leveson Gower and Cotton at the three elections held in 1701 and 1702.3 [PARL]
